

Focus	Lesson Applied	What Happened (Specific Example)	Result/Realization
My Performance	Ethos and Conciseness	I worked on the Visual and Brand Communication/Persuasive Message Design, making sure our designs directly matched Panaderia Delight's aesthetic. I submitted my outputs early, keeping my updates to the point.	Delivering precise work on time built trust with our leader, so she never had to follow up on me. I realized that doing my work on time helped my group trust me more and concise work makes group collaboration much smoother.
Jan Erich Querubin	Clarity and Maxim of Manner	As our leader, Erich clearly laid out the main task breakdown and assigned target roles like Target Audience and Creative Outreach. She communicated our responsibilities step by step in our group chat so no one was confused about what to do.	Her organized approach kept the entire group on track from day one. It showed me how clear, orderly leadership helped everyone know what to do and avoided confusion.
Aaron Cabral	Consistency & Non-Verbal Communication	While collaborating on the visual assets, Aaron and I maintained constant sync, checking in on color schemes and layout drafts. However, there were moments early on when silent reverberations in our chat made me briefly unsure if he saw my updates.	Once we started actively giving quick visual confirmations and acknowledgments, our workflow became smooth. I realized that continuous feedback and active responsiveness prevent minor misunderstandings.
Rafaella Ferrer	Maxim of Quality & Pathos	Rafaella took charge of the Financial, Practicality, and Long-Term Viability	Her accurate work and positive attitude created a smooth environment for the section, backing up her work with accurate numbers and realistic projections. She keeps reassuring us that our deadlines were under control.	group. I realized that combining accuracy with supportive communication keeps the group in one page.

Joaquin De Los Reyes	Logos & Maxim of Quantity	Joaquin worked alongside Rafaella on the financial and viability section, presenting logically structured ideas without overwhelming us with unnecessary details. He provided straight to the point inputs during discussions that directly answered what our plans.	His contributions made our financial strategy easy to understand. It taught me that sharing clear, well-reasoned facts helps the group make fast decisions.
Yi Wen	Completeness & Courtesy	Yi Wen actively assisted our leader with the Target Audience, Channels, and Creative Outreach tasks, ensuring all necessary details were covered. She also checked to see if any other part needs support.	Her helpful presence made sure our strategy had no missing pieces. I realized that being courteous and thorough when offering help strengthens group work.
Overall Reflection	Maxim of Relevance	A key communication issue we faced was managing the overflow of ideas in our main chat, where discussions about financials and visuals sometimes overlapped and created clutter.	I realized that keeping discussions strictly relevant to the specific topic at hand saves time and prevents confusion. Next time, I will suggest using separate topic threads so group communication stays focused and easy to trace.
